White Construction Group Completes Learning Landscape Campus Renovation Project

CASTLE ROCK, Colo., Oct. 10, 2005 – White Construction Group, a Colorado-based construction firm specializing in commercial construction, design-build, historic restorations and tenant improvement projects, today announced the completion of the learning landscape campus renovation project at College View Elementary School.

The Learning Landscape Alliance, a partnership created between Denver Public Schools and the University of Colorado at Denver's College of Architecture and Planning, allows graduate students to work with each school community to design the "learning landscape," a creative approach to playground facilities. A learning landscape raises the standard of what a playground should be, creating inventive possibilities for participatory learning, increasing recreational opportunities, and providing a green space otherwise heavily urban neighborhood.

The project involved the construction of a new playground, surrounding landscape work, and installation of a new storm sewer system. The landscape architect and architectural graduate students worked collaboratively on the design. The project required extensive management to keep within the stringent schedule of school commencement. A dedication ceremony was held on Sept. 9, 2005. Courtney White served as project manager, and the project is valued at $600,000.

Project partners include:

- Client: Denver Public Schools
- Landscape Architect: GPD Land Design, Englewood, Colo.
