White Construction Group Hosting
“Topping Out” Party For Its New Castle Rock
Headquarters on April 8, 2005

CASTLE ROCK, Colo., March 31, 2005 – White Construction Group, a Colorado-based construction firm specializing in commercial construction, design-build, historic restoration and tenant improvement projects, is hosting a topping out party at the construction site of their new company headquarters located at 18 South Wilcox Street, on Friday, April 8, 2005, from 4:30-6 p.m. in celebration of the placement of the topmost member of the structure.

The “topping out” of a building during the construction process celebrates a milestone in the construction of the building and recognizes the accomplishments of the construction workers. The celebration traditionally symbolizes renewal and community growth. European and Asian in origin, the practice of topping out was brought to the United States by immigrants who became the country’s contractors and steelworkers. The contemporary American version of this ceremony includes placing an evergreen tree on the top beam to symbolize that the construction has proceeded well and without injury. The tree also symbolizes respect for the various natural resources contributing to the project.
